THE CHINA MAIL.

HONGKONG, SATURDAY, JULY 24, 1869.

LOCAL PHOTOGRAPHS.

WE but very recently gave publicity to the prospectus of an approaching photographic Exhibition by the Bengal Photographic Society, and expressed our hope that artists and amateurs in China would take pains to have their art in this quarter of the world suitably represented. Our belief that such a result was to be easily achieved has been strengthened by the receipt of a set of beautifully executed and well-finished photographs, 40 in number, which have been forwarded to us for review by Mr. Thompson, F.R.C.S. A larger public than that of Hongkong are already familiar with this gentleman's works from the appearance of some engravings of Cambodian temples, photographed by him, in the Illustrated London News. After the comments in that journal, and a previous notice which has appeared in these columns of his set of local scenes, it is unnecessary for us to do more than draw attention to the more important amongst the set now before us. We may notice, by the way, the very superior style in which they are mounted, thereby displaying their effect to the fullest advantage. They are pleasing in tint, and, so far as amateur knowledge enables us to judge, seem to have been prepared with a care which should ensure their durability for a lengthened period. It is however a matter of no trifling difficulty to select the best where so many are excellent, and we cannot help fancying that a familiarity or otherwise with the scenes depicted unconsciously influences the mind in determining their relative merit. The following appear to us to be the most noteworthy—

The Temple of 500 Gods, Canton.—This gives a view of the celebrated room of the Lohan, amongst which are the (supposed) images of many celebrities in Chinese mythology and history. In arrangement the picture before us resembles that of the similar collection in the Pien-yuen (Temple) near Peking.

Tartar Soldiers, Canton.—A group of soldiers in the grounds of the British Consulate with a view of the ancient Pagoda in the rear. The group is remarkably well taken, and those who desire to see what manner of men the foreign-drilled Tartars may be, will be agreeably surprised at the intelligent cast of face which the majority present.

The entrance to the Temple of 500 Gods, Canton.—Is singularly successful in the way by which the difficulties of light have been overcome, and makes a most pleasing picture.

House of the Poor, Canton.—A slight glimpse in some of the figures is almost redeemed by that of the infirm old woman in the foreground. She is smoking her pipe and regarding the artist, we presume, with an expression similar to that with which an Irish costerwoman, seated with a short duddie in mouth, regards the busy world around her, a mixture of tranquil enjoyment and willingness to be amused by passing trifles. The houses give a good idea of the huts which pass muster amongst the very lower classes. Nursing mothers will appreciate the baby, strapped in the most unbecomingly of positions we should think—for we have not tried it—to the daughter's back.

Creek Life is even more suggestive. Every visitor to the City of Rams recollects the thousands of "shanties" on poles which line the river to the involuntary suicide of their inhabitants. "Infanticide common in China? I should think it was, in houses with gaps of a foot between each floor pole, said a fellow passenger once in our hearing. The picture before us will give a lively idea of the perils of Chinese babyhood to home friends. The little pot so carefully guarded lest it fall down stairs would be materially out of place on the crummy garboard upon which little pigtaildom flourishes in happy dirt and complete idleness till its strength is available to pull, scull, or aid, with that wonderful air of gravity which every native child acquires, the daily work of the household.

Punting in the Garden has given some pleasing scenes to the artist, the most noteworthy being the Willow Pattern Bridge. We have heard it asserted by people who had lived a long time in China that there never was a bridge like the wonderful erection depicted in the familiar crockery. Mr. Thompson has given us the chance of a trip to that garden (a High-pow) into the bargain. We must not omit to mention the examples he has given us of those circular doorways which form so striking and picturesque an item in every extensive native garden. When the view behind is at all picturesque the effect of replacing our square orifices by the circle is remarkably successful.

The Garden of the British Consulate within the City furnishes two other views besides that noted above in which Tartar Soldiers fill the foreground. Of the locality it may be said that it is impossible to get an ugly glimpse of the park-like enclosure; and the photographs are each accordingly very successful.

Governor Yeh's Temple and the City Wall are interesting as specimens of native style. The West Gate is, we think, the best of the architectural series, but others prefer the temple scenes. Are we mistaken in thinking that the latter has been already published in a monthly serial on a reduced scale? Even so, the enlarged photographic business is singularly successful.

Street in Canton is the conventional Chinese street (vide Frontispiece to William's "Middle Kingdom"), but its finish and size render it valuable to those interested in "generic" pictures.

Mr. Thompson has included some Macao views in his collection. Like the others they are carefully finished, but not novel in treatment. Amongst the depictions of native humanity we might recommend the Buddhist Priests playing chess to the notice of artists in want of a subject. Though smaller than its companions, it is a gem in its way, as to notice, we can only say that they each possess attractions for those interested in particular details of pictorial or photographic art.

In connection with the foregoing remarks we may again observe that a Review of Photographs is always more or less imperfect from the fact that it seldom happens that two copies are produced of any one picture exactly alike in tint. But taken as a whole, Mr. Thompson's new series is a most gratifying illustration of the progress made by local art within a recent period.

COLONEL SYKES' MOTION.

WE have often opposed Colonel Sykes in the extreme views he has enunciated, but must admit that he deserves the thanks of every resident in China in having given notice of a motion upon our relations with China. The discussion fixed for the 29th ult., will unfortunately have terminated long before any thing new written can reach the eyes of those interested at home in China matters. We must therefore content ourselves with hoping that the motion "calling attention to the revision of the Treaty of Tientsin" will lead to the various acts of extortion and ill-faith perpetrated by the Chinese during the last ten years, being fully commented upon. The perusal of Sir R. Alcock's "Formosa Despatch" must convince any one not entirely bound hand and foot in the meshes of the peace web that there must be some fundamental error at the bottom of our recent policy. Those who in their studies calmly digest the China news are apt to get indignant at force being used,—because they reason from a civilized community. They admit, for instance, that a man's house may have been burned or himself stoned by a mob; but they add "then the matter should be immediately referred to the authorities." It is this mischievous misuse of words, which our language does not permit us to render in better terms, which is at the root of half the well-meaning, but damaging action of the home authorities as recently put in force. People at home do not comprehend the difference of "authority" in a civilized and semi-civilized country. In what cabinet of Europe for instance could one find a Minister who would openly avow the fear of losing his life if some material improvement in transport were attempted in his country? Yet a prominent member of the Tung-hi Yamen, when discussing the telegraph scheme, said: "I should like to see a telegraph established, but if we attempted it now our heads (drawing his hand across his neck) would soon be loose, I'm afraid," alluding to the anti-foreign party in Peking who would seize such a pretext to oust and possibly take the lives of, the then existing foreign board. Authority is a (very) relative term in China when spoken of side by side with our own rendering of the word. But it is useless writing after the event, so we can only hope. The only man who could effect a change in our policy is unfortunately an ultra pro-Chinese. So we fear more than we hope.

Our correspondent at Macao informs us that the words "The affair of the bridge is now proved to be an accomplished fact," printed in our issue of the 20th instant, do not refer to Mr. Marques Pereira, but to another affair at Macao, with which Mr. Marques Pereira has nothing whatever to do.

We have received a little late from H.B.M. gunboat Davidson, from Labuan, when

THE OFFICIAL RECORD

And now, as so many instances of this kind have recently occurred, the question arises, what reward do the captors receive from the hands of their employers? Elsewhere the captor obtains of distributing among those who have been instrumental in the capture of prize smuggling craft, a share of the prize-money. Whether the Chinese Government will adopt this plan or not, it is not for me to judge, but that it is by far the most practical way of dealing with the question, there can be no reasonable doubt. Men, in general, are not of an occasional decoration from the sovereign of a distinguished country, such as England, France or Prussia, or even from the ruler of the less powerful country of China, but, on the whole, I think, they are in cases such as the one under notice, to be rewarded by the motto hervus rerum gerendum.

On Thursday night in Gay Street, the complainant was buying cigars. The motive was stated the tailor round the prisoner clapped the tailor round the waist, while the other snatched the $3 and the half-dollar. A companion of the complainant partially corroborated this story. It was also stated that the complainant was informed that any cry was got up by the complainant, as stated by the latter. The complainant raised the defence of a fall—was brought up because of a quarrel as between master and workmen, and a number of witnesses were produced to prove an alibi.

The case was remarkable for the traditions comprehended in the evidence, and Mr Russell sent it for trial to the Supreme Court, ordering bail for the complainant in $200, and demanding a security of $200 from the complainant of $200, in addition to the usual recognizance.

and read a circular at once to see how the project would be supported. It was accordingly proposed by Mr Norton, seconded by Mr Hogg, and carried: That a committee of three, consisting of Messrs Rawke, Heard and Vickers, be formed, to invite gentlemen to become members of the club, and to draw up a set of rules and regulations to be submitted to a general meeting. Mr Vickers suggested that it would be desirable that it should be stated in the object of the club was not in any way to interfere with the Regatta Club. Mr. Rawke hoped this would of course be fully understood, but it might not inappropriately be stated in the circular to be sent—and—Press.

mind as the assertion of any impostor that he is an Avatar, or of Mr Sorpe that he is he is Catholic, and Catholics, because Rome has said so; consequently, we are to believe that Ireland is Protestant because the State has a hierarchy there. Both assertions are equally unreal; but the union being set against the other, there is no comfort for good men's minds. In all this, just a little weak in

Baptist Society be true on this policy, Sampson says, "All I can do is to go against it and to pray, which I do most earnestly, that my fears may turn out to be unfounded, and that the consequences I anticipate from it may be averted." It is significant that the Baptist Society in the city, which now, as in the days of Carey, is least to encourage its agents by sympathy and generous confidence.—Friend of the Slave.

ly satisfactory to those interested in the report, that it seems a waste of time at present to pursue it any further. Indeed, Mr. Sumner's friends warned us that there was mischief underlying Mr Sumner's hurried departure, to assure us that they meant to "make-believe," "make-believe," that for eight years there has not been anything like a feeling towards England as present. The Americans, then, are successful in dissembling their love. The moderate partisans in all the countries repeated again and again Mr. Sumner's speech reflected the sentiment of the people, and that is why it was taken up here. Now the New York Times tells its readers that the speech alienated every friend we had in England and turned the whole tide of feeling about the United Kingdom.

THE CHINA MAIL

In the Blakely Ordnance Company v. Blakely, the plaintiffs sought to set aside a voluntary gift of £21,000 debentures made by Capt. Blakely, one of the promoters, to his sister, the said debentures being part of 100, given to Messrs. Blakely and Dent in part payment of £275,000, for which the company was to make over their gunmaking business. It was urged that this gift was void, as, at the time making it, the donor had 1,812 shares with a liability on each of £100, besides owing £250,000 on such shares to Messrs. Blakely and Dent, and Masterman & Co., Lord Romilly, however, held, that "a more honest gift was never made." No call was due on the shares, the plaintiffs were primarily liable to the bank, and there was no ground for the suit, which would be dismissed with costs.

SAD END OF A CARPENTERIAN.—A widow named Rachel Jones, who, after living an age considerably exceeding 100, and being believed 104 years, died on Sunday, May 23, in the Bristol Royal Infirmary from the effects of an accident which befell her on the previous Tuesday. The old carpenter, who in numberless instances was cited in small cottages on Bristol Common, a country district situated about 10 miles from the city. Attached to her cottage was a little garden, and her physical condition may be conceived from the circumstance that she worked at it herself, and kept it in a very tidy state. On Tuesday the old lady cleaned up her cottage, and having put together the spent ashes she carried them out/on to the common. On her way back it is supposed that she took a mark from the fire man's "share" (the name of her gown; for she had not been working out in the free air before the accident) that she was on fire. The poor old woman screamed for assistance, and her grand-grandson, a man of sixty years, of whom she was very fond, and succeeded in getting her time in extinguishing the fire. Before he could do so, however, the poor old woman was badly burnt on the legs and out the body. She was put to bed in haste, and every attention paid to her, and she was hoped at first that she was getting better. But, alas! however, she was sent to the Royal Infirmary, where, notwithstanding every care and attention, she gradually succumbed to the injuries which she had received.
